

A THOUSAND GARDENS IN AFRICA PROMOTED BY THE SLOW FOOD FOUNDATION

Officially launched at Terra Madre conference 2010, the project A Thousand Gardens in Africa of the Slow Food Foundation reached a great impact.

782 gardens have already been implemented in 25 African Countries and most of them have been adopted by international partners. These gardens are promoted by Terra Madre Communities and realized in schools, villages and on the outskirts of cities. In Italy too, the Slow Food network is developing more than 400 school gardens.

The Slow Food Foundation web-page presents the project, the results achieved and a map of the world showing the involved Countries and national and international partners. This project is supported by Veneto Region and Tuscany Region of Italy.

The Handbook for the Slow Food Gardens, available in 11 languages, explains the project objectives and offers a series of suggestions. The educational activities include guides for composting, sowing and cooking.

This project of the Slow Food Foundation, addressed to the youngest, is part of a wide range of activities involving a lot of interested Countries and aimed to promote sustainable agriculture, to defend biodiversity, to protect environment and to support small-scale food producers and value their traditional knowledge.
